Lou brings the firm and its clients more than 22 years of experience in the financial services industry, focused primarily on infrastructure technology, program and project management, and client relationship management. He joined RFA from Merrill Lynch, where he managed the company's institutional and prime brokerage e-commerce portal. He also was site manager, directing Merrill's trading floor and New York Stock Exchange technology infrastructure. Earlier in his tenure with Merrill Lynch, Lou was the firm's global service manager for audio and video conferencing products. He has managed numerous global infrastructure initiatives.

Lou enhances an expanding strategic service organization at RFA, dedicated to "high touch" client service, and state-of-the-art technology infrastructure. His engagement in the new position directly answers customer demand for flexible technology solutions critical to the market as its leaders navigate through turbulent market conditions.
